Tutor biography

Dr. Alex Carter was awarded his PhD in Philosophy by the University of Essex in 2015. Before this, Alex studied Philosophy & Ancient History at the University of Wales, Swansea and Philosophy at the University of Bristol. Alex has taught on a range of subjects including Ethics, History of Philosophy and Philosophy of Religion. He has worked at the Institute of Continuing Education since 2015 as Academic Director for Philosophy and as a Panel Tutor.

Alex's teaching method invites students to feel the "pain of the problem", i.e. to recognise the very real ways in which philosophical problems affect our lives. Accordingly, Alex is most keen to offer his support to philosophical projects that, not only inform contemporary debates, but actively affect change. Alex's ongoing research interests include the theology of Simone Weil and Ludwig Wittgenstein's ethical philosophy.

Course syllabus

Aims:

By engaging in philosophical debate, critically assessing arguments and evidence and asking probative questions students will flex their philosophical muscles. It is hoped that, by the end of the Day School, students will come to appreciate sport (and philosophy) in a new light. The course is open to all and ought to be of particular interest to those who have had no prior experience studying Philosophy.

By working solo and in teams, students will flex their philosophical muscles by tackling difficult questions, serving up arguments and volleying possible responses. Moreover, it is hoped that, by the end of the Day School, students will come to appreciate sport in a new light.

Content:

The Day School will begin by asking a deceptively straightforward question, “What is a game?” This question has great significance in the history of philosophy and remains a pertinent question today (e.g. “Is Bridge a sport?”). Our second session will ask still another deceptively straightforward question, “Does making a game more accurate make it any fairer?” We will also consider whether or not it is really cheating if the referee/umpire doesn’t see it. In our penultimate session we will reflect as a group on equality within sport, in particular gender equality. Should we seek greater gender equality in sport or accept segregation as being “for the greater good”? In closing, we will explore the, arguably, quintessentially British characteristic of sportsmanship. What, if anything, does sport have to teach us about ethical behaviour or is sport itself ethically dubious?

Presentation of the course:

The Day School will be comprised of formal lectures incorporating interactive presentations and discussion sessions. Throughout each session, students will be invited to reflect, comment and pass judgement on the ideas introduced.

As a result of the course, within the constraints of the time available, students should be able to:

- appreciate new and illuminating aspects of sport.
- apply philosophical methods to new and unusual topics.
- critically assess a wide range of philosophical and ethical problems.
