Tutor biography

Loreta Gandolfi is an Affiliate in Film in the Centre for Film and Screen Studies, University of Cambridge, and she supervises and lectures on cinema. She has a PhD in Film Studies from Royal Holloway, University of London, and is completing a book based on her doctoral thesis about the representation of infidelity in French cinema, in particular in the films of François Truffaut and Eric Rohmer. Her other research interests include Italian-Austrian cinematic relations, ‘small cinema’/glocal cinema and the onscreen representation of childhood and adolescence. She is currently preparing a documentary about the impact of Pasolini’s documentary practice. She freelances as a film critic for a variety of international film journals as well as working as international programmer for the Cambridge Film Festival and the Tallinn Black Nights Film Festival.

Day school content:

What is film noir? Debates about the definition of film noir, its formal characteristics and thematic preoccupations, its protagonists, its relation and relevance to the socio-historical times throughout the decades will be the day school’s object of study. The course will examine firstly noir’s iconographic and stylistic conventions and their relation to the narrative and thematic elements, and will then look at noir’s ramified presence in contemporary culture.

Aims:

- to introduce students to the birth and development of film noir
- to provide students with an opportunity to explore noir’s significance in various national contexts
- to enhance students’ critical skills in the study and appreciation of noir across the history of cinema

Presentation:

The course will be taught through a series of four informal lectures in which discussion is encouraged. The lectures will be illustrated with film clips, and the students will be encouraged to bring their own perspectives. A set of viewings before the course is recommended (though not essential):

The Maltese Falcon (Huston, 1941)
Mildred Pierce (Curtiz, 1945)
Double Indemnity (Wilder, 1944)
The Postman Always Rings Twice (Garnett, 1946)
Out of the Past (Tourneur, 1947)

Outcomes:

As a result of the course, students should be able

- to develop an understanding of film noir aesthetic and thematic qualities
- to develop an awareness of noir’s adaptability into several different historical, political and geographical contexts
Reading and resources list

Listed below are a number of texts that might be of interest for future reference, but do not need to be bought (or consulted) for the course.
